Making communications work for everyone

Does the Online Safety Act apply to your service?

Based on the answers you have provided…

No

… the Online Safety Act is not likely to apply to your online service.

You can see your answers in full below.

Please note that this result is indicative only and based on the answers you have provided. It does not constitute legal advice or an Ofcom decision. It is for providers of online services to assess their service and/or seek independent specialist advice in order to determine whether their online service (or the relevant parts of it) are subject to the regulations and understand how to comply with the relevant duties.

What next?

Although based on your responses the regulation are unlikely to apply to your online service, you may still wish to stay up-to-date with the regulations and you can:

1. Check your results to confirm they're accurate. This tool provides an indicative answer and it is your responsibility to assess whether the Act applies to your service, so you should make sure you are confident in your decision. If you need support, you can seek independent professional advice on whether the regulations apply to your service.
2. If you make changes to your online service that could change your answers, use our checker again to see if the regulations apply in future.
3. If useful, you can read more about the online safety duties.

Your answers

We have calculated your result based on your answers below.

1. Does your online service have links with the UK?
   Your answer: Yes

2. Do you provide a "user-to-user" service?
   Your answer: No

3. Do you provide a search service?
   Your answer: No

4. Does your online service publish or display pornographic content?

   Your answer:

   - No, we don’t publish/display any pornographic content

5. Do any exemptions apply to the content on your online service?

   Your answer:

   - Yes, users can only communicate by email, SMS, MMS and/or one-to-one live aural communications; or

6. Do any exemptions apply to your online service?

   Your answer:

   - No, none of the above applies